Most of the buildings in Duranguito's Chihuahua and Overland streets date back to the early 19th century. Each one of these buildings tell a rich and fascinating story of the birth of modern day El Paso, where immigrants from all over the world made their homes. The area houses several of the city's most historic buildings, including the last surviving edifice of the El Paso's early Chinese community, Victorian-era homes constructed in the late 19th century by prominent frontier families, and a 1930 firehouse designed by famed architect Henry Trest.

REBIRTH OF DURANGUITO

(EL PASO, TX) DESIGNER

This community-generated plan for the preservation and restoration of Duranguito, El Paso's oldest neighborhood, is inspired by kintsugi, the Japanese art of mending broken objects based on the philosophy that what something has suffered damage and has a history, it becomes more beautiful. The City of El Paso currently owns several acres with more than a dozen historic buildings that could form part of an "Old Over Duranguito." This restored neighborhood would showcase the city's rich global border history to visitors from around the world. The Plan for the Rebirth of Duranguito proposes a cultural heritage corridor with museums, markets, performance space as well as restored low-income housing, community gardens and other educational services that provides a cutting-edge academic model for historic preservation and equitable development that is truly inclusive to all sectors of the community.

REIMAGINING DURANGUITO

- "Old Town Duranguito:" A Global Border Heritage Corridor.
- Respect, restore and promote our City's historical treasures and architectural roots.
- Real progress and quality of life includes everyone.
- Prevent economic displacement through policies that address gentrification concerns.
- Create meaningful places that connect us, not divide us.

THANK YOU!

- The information provided was derived from meetings with the residents and a door to door community survey which included an informal needs assessment.
- As our work is in its early stages, we will certainly learn of other conditions and needs. We hope to continue to provide the City with new information which will allow us to restore both the physical space and the community spirit.
